John Lowe Farm
Baltimore County

Narrative Description

John Lowe Farm, 327 Church Road (BA-2501) - (Contributing Resource Count 2: includes the house and a large frame bank barn; a family cemetery may also remain on the property but has not yet been located). The Lowe house was constructed in three sections, spanning a two-hundred year period. This includes a square, one-and-one-half story, two bay, one room plan, rubble stone structure with bank cellar and kitchen. The next section is a two story, side gable, brick addition with interior end chimneys, front porch and enclosed two story porch addition on the rear. The third section of the house is a modern two story, brick side addition with central chimney.

The first section was apparently built during the third quarter of the eighteenth century (ca. 1769), the second approximately one hundred years later (ca. 1863), and the last section was added within another century (ca. 1969). (These dates are based on interviews with tenants and field inspection).

The oldest section has one-and-one half stories with attic and a two bay, one room plan with side gable. The structure is laid in rubble stone and has brick infill on the gable end, where two small windows flank the double-pile end chimney. There is a bank cellar with kitchen, which is no longer in use. Inside, the first floor room is presently used as kitchen. This room features built-in paneled cupboards and a small enclosed staircase leading up to the attic. The common rafter roof system employs cut nails and wooden pegs in mortise and tenon joints, and there are tongue-in-groove floor boards.

The nineteenth-century brick addition has two stories, with three bays, side gable, and single pile hall-and-parlor plan. There is an open, shed roof front porch with turned posts, and two interior end chimneys. However, inside, only one fireplace remains; others have been sealed up. This part of the house has a center single-pane door flanked by 8/8 windows on each side top and bottom floors. An enclosed staircase leads to the cellar and to the upper story. On the ground floor, the principal room features a plain chair rail, base and crown molding, and the main entry door has a four-lite transom. The smaller room has been re-paneled with cedar wood. At the second floor landing is a built-in closet with board-and-batten door with original hardware, including strap hinges. In the second floor bedroom, base molding and a very thin crown molding are present. On the rear elevation is a two-story screened-in porch, apparently added after this part of the house was built.

The recent twentieth century addition on the north end has a front gable and is laid in common bond brick and has a exterior central chimney. It is set perpendicular to the main block of the house and has two-and-a-half stories with basement.

The Lowe house is shaded by large mature trees, including sycamore and spruce. Lilac and other small bushes are clustered to the north. Fruit and other ornamental trees, including dogwood, walnut, cherry, and pear, line the west side of the driveway along the field, and reach as far south as the woodland. These were apparently planted in the mid-nineteenth century.

The house is approached by a dirt driveway from Church Road, and the farmhouse sits on a relatively high knoll which drops rather steeply to the east. To the west is a cultivated field, which rises very slightly to a nearly flat, meadow-like field, and then ascends gently to the west. Because the descent cannot be seen from the house or the driveway, this field appears to extend almost indefinitely to the west. To the south, the field goes down to a woodland. The area to the southeast has a low, gentle slope consisting of cultivated fields.

A large bank barn is situated to the south of the house. This Sweitzer-type barn has a full, cantilevered forebay which faces east. The ground floor is constructed of undressed grey stone laid with mortar and covered with plaster. The upper portion consists of vertical wood planks on the exterior. The roof and interior framing system could not be inspected during several field visits. The barn is currently used for storage and is in very good condition. It probably was constructed when the second addition was added to the house in the 1860s, and was repaired in later years.

Narrative Statement of Significance

The John Lowe or Herod Choate Farm, presently identified as 327 Church Road, was originally a portion of the lands acquired by Thomas Harrison in the mid-eighteenth century, when he hired surveyors to mark a number of properties totaling 3240 acres on July 25, 1751. The land grants included much of the land west of Reisterstown Road, in which was a property which Harrison called Soldier's Delight. The entire complex of estates was patented to Harrison on March 25, 1752 (Penniman n.d:17).

Although Harrison owned much of the area, he apparently did little to improve the region. He died during the third quarter of the eighteenth century, and the land was divided into smaller parcels. One of the tracts, called Soldier's Delight and containing 120 acres, was sold by Daniel Bowly and Richard Ridgley, executors to the Harrison estate, to John Lowe, who apparently had a log farmhouse built on the property. A mortgage was held on the property by William Cook, which was released on March 26, 1799 (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber WG 59, folio 44). According to a letter left by John Lowe's sister-in-law dated July 25, 1778, "

...Nicholas's brother, John, also dwells in a log house upon a more westerly section of the estate with his two children, David and Florah. The portion on which John resides is part of a large tract known hereabouts as 'Soldier's Delight' and was purchased by my father-in-law from a Mr. Benjamin Harrison (Forbes 1977:32).

This farm was a portion of the massive Lowe estate. It was passed by will during the early decades of the 19th century to John Lowe's son, David Lowe. David Lowe also purchased land from John Lowe and Austin Choate in 1812. He lived on the farm during the first half of the 19th century, and in his will dated December 18, 1839, he devised the farm to Alfred Lowe and Herod Choate following the death of his wife. The Lowe widow apparently did not pass away until c. 1853. Alfred Lowe, well established on the adjacent tract (Nicholas Lowe's farm, his father, which he acquired in 1829) to the east, sold his half-interest in the farm of 194 acres to Herod Choate on October 3, 1853 to Herod and Priscilla Choate (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber HMF 7, folio 78). They occupied the farm for the proceeding twenty-five years. The 1870 Federal Population Census recorded that Herod Choate, a 73-year-old farmer, was living on the property with his wife, two children, and several tenants.

On October 15, 1874, they sold it to their daughter Eleanor Choate in return for "the natural love and affection" she had shown them (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber JB 90, folio 232). Eleanor G. Choate sold the farm to Elizabeth Sloffer on November 7, 1878 for $2500, the property then containing 32 acres with improvements (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber JB 109, folio 421). They owned and occupied the property for a number of years, selling it on December 12, 1891 to Alfred Lowe for $2950 (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber LMB 190, folio 1). It appears that at this point, Alfred Lowe took possession of the Choate Farm and gave his son, Perry Lowe, the farm to the east. He is shown as occupying the farm in the 1898 map of Baltimore County, and died there during late 1899 or early 1900. In his will, written on May 17, 1899 and proven on February 14, 1900, he left the following to Jacob Worrell, his great-nephew:

...Item 3. I give and devise to Jacob Worrell that part of my real estate containing 101 acres and 37 square perches of land, designated as Lots 2 and 4 on the plat of division of my lands...Item 14. I also give and devise to Jacob Worrell one third of the crops upon the place at the time of my death, be the same matured or growing. Also to Jacob Worrell, I give and devise one-third of the rest and residue of my property, consisting of horses, cattle, hogs, farming implements and furniture, also one-third of the money at the time of my death...(Baltimore County Recorder of Wills, Liber HJH 11, folio 448).

Jacob Worrell apparently sold portions of the property to others during his ownership, but retained the portion containing the farmhouse and surrounding fields. He was left with 32 acres, which he sold to George Uhler on September 22, 1910 (WPC 372/272). On the same day, George and Margaret Uhler sold the property back to Jacob L. and Alpha D. Worrell for $5.00 (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber WPC 372, folio 273). During his ownership of the property, and additional nineteen acres had been added to the property. On April 10, 1950, Jacob L. Worrell, widower, sold the 53 acre tract to Edward J. and Marie H. Meyers (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber TBS 1827, folio 450).

During the past forty years the property has been owned and occupied by various members of the Smith family. On March 26, 1952, Edward J. and Marie H. Meyers sold the property to J. Temple and Edna Smith for the sum of $5.00 (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber GLB 2089, folio 336). The Smith's, in turn, sold it on November 16, 1960 to Mary A. Garvin, for the sum of $5.00 (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber WJR 3783, folio 88). On November 16, 1960, Mary A. Garvin sold the 53 acre farm property to J. Temple Smith for the sum of $5.00 (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber WJR 3783, folio 93). It was passed on August 2, 1962 by J. Temple Smith and his wife M. Edna Smith to the Steuart, Ensor and Schuster, Inc. Company for $5.00 (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber WJR 4174, folio 312), which thereafter became Steuart, Ensor and Company, Inc. This company resold the 53 acre tract to J. Temple Smith on May 18, 1972 for $5.00 (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber WJR 5773, folio 67). On June 30, 1980, J. Temple Smith sold the property to Martin J. Smith and James T. Smith Jr., his sons, for the sum of $190,000 (Baltimore County Recorder of Deeds, Liber WJR 6179, folio 580). Martin and James Smith are the present owners of the Choate Farm property, as recorded within the Baltimore County Tax Assessment, map 57, parcel 138. It has been known by the names of Valley Home, Glen Farm and Four Chimneys.

Preliminary investigation indicates that the earliest section was built during the late eighteenth century, the second section during the mid-nineteenth century and the final section during the mid-twentieth century. The integrity of this Lowe House has been somewhat clouded by the construction of the rear two-story porch, the removal of some of the fireplaces, and the addition of a late-twentieth century wing. Nevertheless, the basic historic form and character of the late eighteenth and nineteenth century additions remains intact. The late eighteenth century section is in extremely good condition, and retains significant interior features such as the built-in cupboards and closet. It is also a good example of a single-room plan house with a banked cellar kitchen. The nineteenth century section has also retained its original form and some interior molding details.

The barn is a good example of a nineteenth century Sweitzer-type bank barn, a property type that is becoming rare in Baltimore County. The house shows a continuous sequence of building over a 200-year period. Moreover, the surrounding landscape at the Lowe house maintains its natural and historic integrity and greatly enhances the property's significance. With its history of adaptation and use over an approximately two hundred year period, the property is potentially significant both because it retains one of few remaining late eighteenth century houses within the county, and because it illustrates the evolution of architectural styles and building practices from the eighteenth through the twentieth centuries in Baltimore County. It is potentially eligible for listing on the National Register under criteria C because it appears to embody the "distinctive characteristics of a type, period or method of construction".

Square, one-and-one-half story, two bay, one room plan, rubble stone with brick infill in the gable end, side gable, detached dwelling on bank cellar with cellar kitchen; two story, three bay, single pipe hall and parlor plan, side gable, brick addition with interior end chimneys, enclosed stairs leading to the cellar and to the upper story plain chair rail, shed-roofed front porch, enclosed two story porch addition on the rear elevation; modern two story, side gable, brick addition with central chimney, set perpendicular to the main block of the house.

The house was constructed in three sections. The first section built during the late eighteenth century, the second during the mid-nineteenth century and the third during the mid-twentieth century.

Although the formal integrity of this structure has been somewhat obscured by the construction of the two story porch and large, twentieth century additions, the basic historic character of the late eighteenth and nineteenth century sections remains intact. The late eighteenth century section is in extremely good condition, with a cellar and a porch which have been subjected to few alterations. The primary floor is currently used as a modern kitchen.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Situated on a parcel of land purchased by Nicholas Lowe Sr. from Benjamin Harrison in 1758, the John Lowe Farm was occupied by Nicholas Lowe's brother John in 1758. Nicholas Lowe had acquired a large tract of land north of Owings Mills and constructed an estate along the Reistertown Turnpike, called Food A-Plenty, by 1747. A letter written in 1778 states:

Nicholas' brother, John, also dwells in a log house upon a more westerly section of the estate with his children, David and Florah. The portion on which John resides is part of a large tract known hereabouts as "Soldiers Delight" and was purchased by my father-in-law from a Mr. Benjamin Harrison (Forbes 1988:32).

The map, which depicts the locations of John Lowe's log house, of "Food A-Plenty" and of the "Soldiers Delight" tract, also shows "Lowe's Cemetery" near Old Church Lane.

Further research is necessary to fully reconstruct the over two hundred year history of ownership of this property, which was subdivided during the late eighteenth or early nineteenth century. Alfred Lowe, Sr., the grandson of an English immigrant who became a wealthy farmer in District 4, was born at the Lowe farm in 1805. He is said to have lived his life on this property located within the "Soldiers Delight" (Chapman Publishing Co. 1897: 431-432). Herod Choate purchased a tract of land within Harrison's Meadow, containing the Lowe family cemetery, from Caleb Stansbury in 1839 (Baltimore County Deeds, Liber 287, Folio 131). This parcel, which encompasses the eastern portion of the original tract purchased by Nicholas Lowe, is recorded as the residence of Herod Choate on the 1850 and 1877 Atlas of Baltimore County, and as under the ownership of Alfred Lowe on the 1898 county atlas.

Further research is also necessary to determine the original owner and builder, as well as the subsequent occupants, of the house which is currently located at 327 Church Road. Field investigation indicates that the earliest section was built during the late eighteenth century, the second section during the mid-nineteenth century and the final section during the mid-twentieth century.

With its history of adaptation and use over an approximately two hundred year period, the property is significant both because it retains one of few remaining late eighteenth century houses within the county, and because it illustrates the evolution of architectural styles and building practices from the eighteenth through the twentieth centuries in Baltimore County. It is eligible for listing on the National Register under criteria C because it embodies the "distinctive characteristics of a type, period or method of construction".
